2023 Workplace Wellness Survey Methodology Overview

- 4th year of the Workplace Wellness Survey which builds on:
  - The Workplace Wellness Survey (2020-2022)
  - The Health and Workplace Benefits Survey (2013-2018)
  - The Health Confidence Survey (1998-2012)
  - The Value of Benefits Survey (1999 and 2001)
- Interviewed 1,505 American full-time and part-time workers ages 21-64 – this year included a national sample of 1,002 workers and an oversample of 503 completed surveys among caregiver workers, bringing the total to 753 caregiver workers.
- Information for this study was gathered through 20-minute online interviews conducted July 8- August 1, 2023 using the Dynata online panel.
- Data weighted by race, age, gender, income, and caregiver status to reflect employed Americans ages 21-64. The margin of error (at the 95% confidence level) for the total sample of current workers in this study (n=1,505) would be plus or minus approximately 2.6 percentage points.

Please note percentages in the following tables and charts may not total to 100 due to rounding and/or missing categories. Any trend changes or differences in subgroups noted in text are statistically significant; if no trend changes are noted, there were no significant differences.

Though job satisfaction remains fairly high, three in ten American workers are concerned about their own workplace well-being.

- Three in ten American workers are highly concerned about their workplace well-being (e.g., engagement, stress or morale), while about a quarter are not too or not at all concerned.
- Two-thirds are at least somewhat concerned that their employer will lay-off employees or reduce hours, and closer to three-quarters are concerned employers will not offer raises or bonuses. Three in 10 say lay-offs have occurred at their workplace in the past year.
- Although down from last year, half of workers report being extremely or very happy with their current job, and just over half feel very likely to stay with their current employer for the next two years. Another third feel somewhat likely to stay with their employer.
- Company culture is cited by 61% as having the greatest negative impact on overall well-being, whereas just 22% feel it has a positive impact. Family has the greatest positive impact on overall well-being.
- Two-thirds suggest they trust their employer to help them improve their overall well-being through quality benefits and resources, and nearly six in ten often feel pride in their work.

Satisfaction with Current Job

Concern about Workplace Well-Being

A sizeable minority of workers are concerned about their mental health and emotional well-being and nearly eight in ten believe employers have a responsibility to help.

- A third of American workers report that they are concerned about their emotional well-being or mental health, and a quarter rate their mental health as fair or poor.
- About half of workers say they often or always feel stressed. Nearly four in ten report that they often feel anxiety or depression, and about a quarter often experience feelings of loneliness.
- Half report that their mental health and well-being negatively impacts their performance at work.
- A higher percentage than for physical health or financial health, eight in ten workers at least somewhat agree that their employer has a responsibility to make sure employees are mentally healthy and emotionally well.
- Employees are torn, however, on how well their employer communicates about mental health and work-life balance, with 37% rating their employer's communication excellent or very good and 35% calling them fair or poor.

Concern about Emotional Well-Being

Employer Responsibility: %Agree

As economic challenges worry workers, day-to-day finances start to cause more stress than longer-term financial priorities, like retirement.

- American workers are worried about how potential economic challenges will impact their finances. More than four out of five American workers are at least somewhat concerned that there will be a recession in the next year or that inflation will remain high for at the next 12 months.
- For the first time in the WWS, workers report that having enough savings for an emergency and paying monthly bills are the financial issues that cause them the most stress. In years past, saving enough for retirement held the top spot among concerns, and it remains a close third.
- Three-quarters of workers report that their household's level of debt is a major (29%) or minor (47%) problem.
- Overall, four in ten suggest they are highly concerned about their household's financial well-being, down from nearly half (48%) last year. Still, more than half agree that worrying about finances distracts them from work.

Concern about Household's Financial Well-Being

Top Stress Causing Financial Issues

Employees are not prepared for unexpected expenses and prioritize emergency savings. Majorities want a workplace emergency savings account and would contribute significantly.

- Four in ten workers feel at least somewhat prepared to handle an emergency expense of $5,000, though only 18% feel very prepared. Far more Americans (70%) feel more equipped to manage an unexpected expense of $500, though three in ten feel ill-prepared.
- To pay for an unexpected expense of $5,000, nearly half of employees would take the funds from their savings or investments. Three in ten would charge the expense to their credit card (31%) or ask family and friends (31%).
- More than half of employees agree that their retirement plan savings are the only significant emergency savings that they have.
- Nearly two in ten workers report they are currently offered an emergency savings account at work. Among those without, more than four out of five employees would be interested in one. Further, when asked to allocate $600 across six possible workplace accounts, employees allocate on average $171 to an emergency savings account – trailing only the retirement savings account.

Prepared for Unexpected $5,000 Expense

Allocation of Employer-Offered $600

Available to large majorities, health insurance and retirement savings plans contribute to employees' feelings of financial security. Yet, benefits satisfaction declines.

- Down slightly from last year and from 2021, 40% of employees are extremely or very satisfied with their benefits package and 22% are not too or not at all satisfied. At the same time, seven in ten agree at least somewhat that their benefits package is designed to meet their lifestyle and/or family needs.
- Health insurance (81%) continues to be the most common benefit employees say is offered to them, followed by retirement savings plans (78%), dental insurance (72%), vision insurance (69%), and life insurance (61%).
- Health insurance (70%) and retirement savings plans (54%) are most important to employees' decision to stay in their current job or choose a new job. Six in ten say being offered health insurance (59%) and retirement savings plans (56%) through their employer contributes a lot to their feeling of financial security.
- Employees feel the most valuable improvements to their benefits package would include greater employer financial contributions (54%), more benefits and resources to help with their financial well-being (34%) and more choices and benefits to choose from (31%).

Satisfaction with Benefits Package %Extremely/Very Satisfied

Top Valuable Improvements

Aside from income and compensation, employees most value work-life balance, schedule flexibility, and paid time off from an employer.

- Although health and retirement benefits remain the most important for job decisions, employees place work-life balance (55%), flexibility in work schedule (48%), and generous paid time off benefits (37%) in the top three of what they most value from an employer. These rank higher than quality health and retirement benefits.
- Just over a third (36%) describe the work-life balance at their company as excellent or very good, which has been trending downward since 2021. Three in ten rate it as fair or poor.
- Workers suggest the number of hours worked (41%) and schedule flexibility (39%) are the biggest workplace contributors to their sense of work-life balance. Importantly, doing meaningful work or work they enjoy ties with workload for contributing to work-life balance.
- The amount of paid time off and the ability to truly disconnect when taking time off also rank high on the list. Half of employees are satisfied with the paid time off benefits they receive.
- Paid time off follows health and retirement on the list of most important benefits when deciding whether to stay with an employer or selecting a new job, and the share choosing this as a top 3 benefit has increased from last year.

Most Valued From Employer

Contribute Most to Work-life Balance

More than half of workers feel mental health benefits have become more important to offer in the past year, and four in ten feel the same way about financial wellness programs.

- Given concerns about emotional and financial well-being and belief that employers have a responsibility to help employees in these areas, it's not too surprising that many feel that mental health benefits (54%) and financial wellness programs (41%) have become more important for employers to offer.
- However, many workers are not offered these benefits. About four in ten are offered resources or tools to help them manage mental health (38%) and three in ten are offered expanded mental health benefits, such as free counseling sessions with a mental health coach or therapist. Among employees who do not have these mental health resources available, seven in ten feel they would be very or somewhat interested in having them.
- Thirty-eight percent report being offered a financial wellness program, and when offered, about half have used it. Half of those who have used their financial wellness program report it was useful, and more than third of those who are not offered one feel it would be useful.
- Two-thirds suggest they would be comfortable using employer resources to manage their emotional well-being or their financial well-being, though most just somewhat agree.
- Four in ten employees feel they understand the benefits and resources their employer makes available to help with emotional well-being or financial well-being extremely or very well. A third do not understand their financial well-being benefits, and 28% don't understand their emotional well-being benefits.

Change in Importance to Offer

Comfortable Using: %Agree

Health insurance is the most important benefit. Fifty-five percent of workers are satisfied with their health coverage.

- Four in ten American workers express concern about their physical well-being or health. The share rating their concern the highest (a 9 or 10 on a 10-point scale) is significantly lower than last year (27% in 2022 and 18% now). Ratings of overall health (53% excellent/very good) are higher than ratings of emotional health (43%).
- In addition to core medical coverage, which eight out of ten report being offered by their employer, half of workers report that they are offered a Health Savings Account (HSA). Two-thirds of those with an HSA use it to cover future (66%) or current (63%) health costs, while only 37% view it as a way to cover costs in retirement.
- Nearly as many are offered a health wellness program (47%) and a third report they are offered supplemental health insurance. One in four report being offered a health coach or navigator service. Two-thirds of those who do not have a health coach available would be at least somewhat interested in it.
- Despite benefits offered and used, half of American workers report that they face medical-related debt that's a problem for their household. This debt is most often caused by a medical emergency, prescription drug costs, or a chronic illness or injury.

Concern about Physical Well-Being

Reasons to put Money into HSA

Nearly six in ten American workers struggle to balance work and caregiving responsibilities. Among caregivers assisting with ADLs or IADLs, three in four struggle to find balance.

- Fifty-eight percent of all workers agree that they struggle to keep a good balance between work and caregiving responsibilities. Among caregivers who provide unpaid help with activities of daily living (ADLs) or instrumental activities of daily living (IADLs), three-quarters say they struggle to balance work and caregiving.
- Those who feel challenged in balancing work and caregiving, regardless of caregiver status, report feeling generally overwhelmed (50%) and like they don't have enough time with loved ones (34%). A quarter feel unable to fully focus on work when working.
- Roughly a quarter of all workers who have difficulty balancing work and caregiving report significant financial strain (26%) or debt (23%). Interestingly, financial stress is noted by about the same share of caregivers.
- Americans are not financially prepared for caregiving. Six in ten feel not too or not at all prepared to reduce hours or have to stop working for 6 months to care for a child or other loved one. Two-thirds of current caregivers feel ill-prepared.
- Few report that their employer offers caregiving-related benefits. Overall, just 13% say they are offered caregiving support and services. Seventeen percent report being offered paid caregiver leave or childcare assistance or subsidies, 15% are offered subsidized or free childcare, and one in eight are offered eldercare assistance. A third, however, have access to an EAP.
